The purpose of the Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center is to provide cultural, historical, and other learning opportunities concerning Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt, the New Deal, and American history during the 1930s and 1940s, and to advance the importance and relevance of the New Deal legacy in the world today.

In addition to educational outreach programs, one of the primary activities of the FDR American Heritage Center is to operate the Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center Museum, located on the second floor of the historic Union Station in Worcester, Massachusetts, and the Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center Special Collection, located in the historic Henry Hobson Richardson Room of the Thomas Crane Public Library in Quincy, Massachusetts. Both the Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center Museum and Special Collection are centers to one of the finest primary source collections of documents, artifacts, and other historical ephemera related to Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt and the New Deal.

The Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center Museum is located in the heart of historic Worcester, Massachusetts at the renovated Union Station. Worcester's first Union Station, built with a single tower at Washington Square in 1875, served as a consolidated station for rail lines. Construction on a "new" Union Station began in 1909. Its ornate design was reminiscent of a Roman basilica, with arched doorways and a tower at either end. On the second floor of the completely renovated Union Station you will find some of the most historical and rare documents, artifacts, and other ephemera of the 1930s and 1940s relating to America in the era of Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt, including how President Roosevelt and his Administration dealt with the awesome challenges and responsibilities of the Great Depression and World War II.

The Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center Special Collection is exhibited in the historic Henry Hobson Richardson Room of the Thomas Crane Public Library in Quincy, Massachusetts. The renovated Henry Hobson Richardson Room is the original library building dating back to 1882. The original library building, designed by Henry Hobson Richardson, and funded by Albert Crane in honor of his father, Thomas Crane, is built in the Romanesque style. It is considered Richardson's masterpiece in the field of library architecture. The foundation is of Quincy granite, the upper structure of North Easton granite, and the trimming of Longmeadow brownstone.

The goals of the Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center are to sponsor and promote:

- ✓ The Franklin D. Roosevelt American Heritage Center Museum and Special Collection, presenting primary source documents relating to Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt and the New Deal;
- ✓ Interactive, computer-based, student-oriented presentations of the life and times of Franklin D. Roosevelt;
